RECREATION

The Comeback of Palmer Park is Complete, Now It's Time For YOU to Visit & Have Fun!

Nestled not too far from Detroit's northern border sits Palmer Park. This rustic getaway in urban Detroit is much more than green space. It is a testament to history, community, and revitalization. Originally named Log Cabin Park by U.S. Senator Thomas Witherall Palmer in 1893, the Detroit Common Council renamed it Palmer Park in 1897. Palmer Park has preserved 70 acres of virgin forest while seamlessly blending heritage and modernity. The untamed forest is called Witherall Woods. Walking through it is akin to walking back in time. Some of the trees within it are over 350 years old. The caregiver of this 296 acre urban jewel is Stacy Varner. She is the President of People for Palmer Park. Since she has taken the helm, Palmer Park has gone from being on life support to a thriving part of the overall community. Her passion for Palmer Park is only surpassed by her vivacious smile. This park is a living legacy, a place that invites all Detroiters to connect, play, and reflect.

Stacy Varner

Varner emphasizes that Palmer Park is designed to meet the diverse needs of Detroiters. We've integrated apple orchards and a butterfly garden to deepen the connection with nature, while picnic grounds "complete with shelters and electronic charging stations" offer comfort and convenience for gatherings, she explains. These thoughtful touches highlight a forward-thinking approach that respects tradition while embracing contemporary lifestyles. Another Detroit landmark, not germane to Palmer Park, but deeply embedded in the hearts of Detroit concert goers is the State Fair Bandshell. Saved from the wrecking ball, the bandshell was carefully dismantled and relocated a mile south to Palmer Park. Ms. Varner states: *Sounds from the Park featuring saxophonist Marcus Elliott will be on Saturday, August 23rd. A*fter that, this vibrant hub for music and events will host another concert (talent to be determined) on October 5th to close out the season. Come by and check it out. Bring your lawn chairs and enjoy!

Senator Palmer's Log Cabin

Visitors can also explore the actual Log Cabin residence of Senator Palmer and his wife Lizzie. Palmer's Log Cabin is a direct link to the pioneer days of Detroit. In addition to Palmer's Log Cabin is the idyllic Lake Francis and Lighthouse. Sitting directly across from the Log Cabin. It's important to note Lake Francis was named for Palmer's mother in law, Francis (Pitts) Merrill. The man made lake was recently dredged and has a filtration system intact. The lighthouse, within the lake, adds to the overall charm. Beyond its historical treasures, Palmer Park embraces modern recreational features that make it an active, engaging space. In a city often spotlighted for its resilience, Palmer Park stands out as a shining example of renewal. It beckons families, athletes, history buffs, and casual strollers alike. It's a place where Detroit's past and present intertwine seamlessly, offering rest, recreation, and rekindled pride. There is a splash pad where children can cool off on warm days, disc golf courses for sports enthusiasts, and tennis courts buzzing with energy. Excitingly, pickleball courts are on the horizon, promising even more options for community play. We would be remiss not to mention the dog park. Canines are welcome!

Lake Francis

Renovated Bandshell

Supporting and cherishing Palmer Park means investing in a shared green space that nurtures community spirit and celebrates Detroit's unique identity. If you haven't yet visited Palmer Park, now is the perfect time. Step into a space where history whispers through the trees, laughter fills the courts, and every corner offers a new story. Palmer Park isn't just a park, it's Detroit's living heartbeat. All are invited to join in, and contribute, its vibrant rhythm. Palmer Park is open every day from 6 am to 10 pm.

BEFORE and AFTER

1943 & 1960

2025

1960

2025

This is the Jimmy Hoffa edition of Before and After. In remembrance of the labor leader and Detroiter. Hoffa and his new wife and baby (Barbara) moved into his newly built Detroit home at 16154 Robson in 1939. Look at the photographs on top. In the black and white, Hoffa is pictured with his son Jim in 1943. Notice the neighborhood is new. No plant life obscures the view. You can see the houses on Lauder street around the corner. Seventeen years later, in 1960, Hoffa has a new door with an "H" for Hoffa on it. There are also mature shrubs on the property along with an awning. Hoffa also changed the address sign from brown to white. The location of the address sign stayed the same. In the 2025 picture you can see the address sign has changed locations. It now sits on the outer edge. Today the house has a little wear and tear on the front steps, but overall the abode has stood up well to time. The same is true for the homes across the street. In the 1960 picture we see Hoffa flanked by his two children when Barbara graduated from college. Notice the fire hydrant in both pictures. At this point Jimmy Hoffa was the most powerful private citizen in the USA. His word alone could shut down the entire country. Yet, he still lived in his modest home on Robeson in northwest Detroit. Jimmy Hoffa spent 20 years in the Puritan / Greenfield neighborhood. He surely shopped at the old Chatham's Super Market on the corner. Jimmy Hoffa was a regular guy who got black men trucking jobs along with whites. I ought to know. My father was a teamster.

COVER STORY

Kevin Saunderson:

Music Icon is Also a Baseball Enthusiast

After 40 years, Kevin Saunderson is still rocking the house. The Monthly Standard attended a recent event where Saunderson absolutely CONTROLLED the mood of the crowd. One could say Saunderson was the house DJ that night at Club Spotlite on Detroit's east side, but his appearance was much more than that. It's was a show! The mood shifted from dark to upbeat, but was always rhythmic. Saunderson was a beast, with energy to burn. He literally stood and performed for over FIVE HOURS without a break. During his seemingly unending set he expertly rose the tempo, slow and steady. Then, the intensity surged! You could actually feel the sound vibrating throughout your being. By midnight the crowd was in an unstoppable frenzy and it kept going, and going and going.

Saunderson Is in Good Company

When you invent a new sound fame follows. We can go back to the 1920's when Louis Armstrong burst onto the scene with his Dixieland jazz. In the 1950's the loud and raw, Rock & Roll sound of Little Richard was totally new, and scared many conservative parents from that era. In the 1970's George Clinton created Parliament-Funkadelic. That sound surely had never been heard. Then in the late 1980's Kevin Saunderson's group Inner City released "Good Life." It was an instantaneous hit. The sound was new, but people could not explain it. Except to say: "It sounds good." Only one person can explain how the new sound on Good Life (and "Big Fun") was created, and that's the creator himself, Kevin Saunderson: "I use a combination of synthesizers. CZ 1000, 909 drum machines, computers, sequencers, 727 Roland drum machine, and just became unique with creating sounds. I was a futurist & that helped lead me to experimentation with electronic instruments." WOW! Many others used the exact instruments as Saunderson but did not have the mental acuity or creativity as Kevin. That's why he is still applauded around the globe today.

Kevin Saunderson's legacy is undeniable. As a founding member of the Belleville Three, alongside Derrick May and Juan Atkins, Saunderson helped shape the Detroit techno sound that transformed the musical landscape over the past four decades. His pioneering work not only propelled techno from underground clubs to mainstream recognition but also left an indelible mark on popular culture. As techno continues to evolve and inspire new generations, his foundational role remains a touchstone. More than a genre pioneer, he embodies the spirit of endurance and versatility. His story reminds us that greatness often comes from embracing all sides of who we are and channeling passion into each pursuit with equal vigor. Saunderson's legacy is going to last well into the 21st century. His son's Damarii and Dantiez both embrace Saunderson's gift and are putting on shows themselves. Saunderson's career shows a remarkable testament to his staying power in an industry known for its rapid changes. Along with his hit "Good Life" and his follow-up "Big Fun" he is credited with bringing techno to a wider audience and defining the genres early sound. Those anthems remain influential today, celebrated for their infectious energy and innovative production.

Saunderson Plays in the MSBL

Beyond the studio and stage, Saunderson shows a surprising and refreshing side: his love for baseball. Active in the Mens Senior Baseball League (MSBL), he exemplifies a balanced life, blending artistic pursuits with athletic camaraderie. For Saunderson baseball is more than just a pastime; it's a passion that keeps him grounded and connected to community outside of the music world. This dual devotion to both music and baseball humanizes a figure often mythologized for his achievements. It reveals a multifaceted individual who thrives on both creative expression and teamwork, whether on the dance floor or the baseball diamond.

FEATURE STORY

Hoffa Was Cremated at Grand Lawn Cemetery

It's been 50 years since the murder of Jimmy Hoffa. The Monthly Standard solved the Hoffa mystery 5 years ago. This article is from our December 2020 edition.

As a former employee of Grand Lawn Cemetery I heard the rumors. For example: One day the former manager of the cemetery told me: "You know Jimmy Hoffa was cremated here don't you?" I said: No. Really? How do you know? He shrugged off my intrusive question and said: "That rumor has been going on around this place since the '70's." After that, I never gave that conversation any thought. Not until last year. That's when the movie "The Irishman" was released. Now I believe that "rumor" has truth to it. Martin Scorsese has a reputation of making historically accurate films. His films are based upon true stories such as: Goodfellas, Casino, and The Wolf of Wall Street. Thus far, his films have not deviated from the truth. I believe "The Irishman" is no different. It's based on fact. The main characters in Scorsese's latest biopic are dead. The victim, Jimmy Hoffa, his killer, Frank "The Irishman" Sheeran, and the mafia chieftain, Russell Bufalino. Since these men are not alive to confirm or deny their portrayal in the film, how do we know it's true? Scorsese based his film on "I Heard You Paint Houses" by Charles Brandt. Released in 2004, the book is a dying declaration by Frank "The Irishman" Sheeran. Martin Scorsese believes Sheeran's account, and so do I. The stars of the movie believe Brandt's book is based upon the truth too. CBS News asked Robert DeNiro (who plays Frank Sheeran) and Al Pacino (who plays Jimmy Hoffa) if they believed the story was true. DeNiro replied: "I do. Yep." Pacino said: "Yeah, I sorta do too. Too many things when he tells the story are so accurate...There's so many details that come out, that you just say, that's real." Scorsese, who was in earshot chimed in: "Yeah, yeah." Some who don't agree with Sheeran's account. One such person is Vince Wade. He broke the Hoffa story while reporting for WXYZ Channel 7 in Detroit back in 1975. Wade says: Sheeran did not kill Jimmy Hoffa. I am not alone in thinking this." Obviously, Wade is a naysayer. The Monthly Standard does not agree with the naysayers. Here's why. The naysayers do not have an alternative theory. Wade relies entirely on the FBI account, but there's a MAJOR problem with that. The FBI joined the Hoffa investigation 4 days late. The lead FBI agent on the case, Bob Garrity, admitted the FBI had a late start. "We weren't on the scene for some of the criticals...The search of the car. When you're in there you get a feel for the case from the beginning. It's something we wished we had the opportunity to do." On the other hand, the Sheeran account makes perfectly good sense. The mob knew only a good friend of Hoffa could get close enough to kill him. Hoffa grew up in Detroit. He was street smart, and his cautious nature was well known. That's why the mob gave Sheeran the contract. There's no way Hoffa would've gotten into a car with strangers. When Hoffa saw Sheeran, a man he trusted, he felt comfortable and got in. From that point forward everything fit mafia protocol perfectly. Hoffa's execution was a well planned operation.

The Irishman Movie Poster

The mob had a plan and they executed it. Hoffa was picked up at the Machus Red Fox on Telegraph in Bloomfield Twp. Next, he was driven to 17841 Beaverland street a few blocks off of Telegraph in Detroit. That's where his best friend shot him. The movie clearly shows Hoffa being cremated after his murder. Sheeran knew a cremation occurred. He doesn't know where. Sheeran left town immediately after his crime was complete. The clean-up crew was responsible for disposing Hoffa's body. The Monthly Standard (TMS) believes the mob drove 2 short minutes across Grand River to Grand Lawn Cemetery. (See the short trip from the kill house to the cemetery yourself! Go to our website. We drove for you. Take a vicarious journey through video. www.themonthlystandard.news). While compiling additional research material concerning the Hoffa case, I discovered an article promoting another book written about the Hoffa murder. The book is entitled, "Digging for the Truth" by an ex Detroit Police Officer Jeff Hansen. An article written about Hansen's book appeared in the Detroit Free Press on July 8, 2007. Hansen also believes Hoffa was cremated at Grand Lawn. Email us at tms@servicestarnetwork.com and we'll send you a link. Read the Hansen account for yourself. Frank Sheeran was a mob soldier. He always kept his mouth shut. Except as a dying declaration. He had no reason to lie about killing Hoffa. As far as the Grand Lawn angle. It just makes sense. They don't call mobsters "wiseguys" for nothing. Taking Hoffa across the street to Grand Lawn was the smart move. Hoffa was killed and cremated on the day he was kidnapped. (July 30, 1975) Since that day, Hoffa was literally dust in the wind. The FBI started late and never caught up. That's why after 45 years nobody has been prosecuted for the murder of Jimmy Hoffa.

THE WAY THINGS ARE GOING PRETTY SOON THEY'LL BE PUTTING ADVERTISING ON UNDERWEAR!

By Dana Redd

Joe Boxer knows what they're doing. This underwear brand sticks out to me because of their large, bold letters (great font) they use to wrap around the waistband. And with the kids who like to show off their underwear, this is the greatest advertisement for Joe Boxer. Personally, I believe this droopy drawers, saggy pants phenomenon is ridiculous. Why would someone want to have their drawers showing and limiting their ability to walk (more or less run)? Many kids in this new generation (and even young adults who aren't kids anymore) think it's cool.

That's why I'm surprised the mainstream advertising executives on Madison Avenue in New York City haven't exploited this opportunity. Maybe they're in the planning process. (They are usually slow to catch on to things that have an urban origin). Can you imagine a McDonald's golden arch posted right in the middle of someone's butt? How about a Ford logo on some blue and white underwear? Here's a possible ad agency strategy: Go to any community and find the most popular guys – the athletes, the rappers, the singers, musicians & dancers, the extreme sports freaks, and even the nerds (kids tend to copy after the popular people) and offer them partial educational or technical trade school scholarships. You better believe those company logos will be all over town.

Think about it – you're driving down the street thinking about what movie you want to see later that evening and you spot a group 'hip' young guys walking down the street all wearing saggy pants with their underwear showing. (How about lighted drawers for evening wear?) One pair says "Spiderman." Another has a "Pepsi" logo, and yet another has a Snickers bar posted on a bright white pair of tight briefs. Somehow, later that night, you don't totally realize why you went to see the new Spiderman movie, while munching on a Snickers bar and sippin' on an extra large Pepsi. Wake up Madison Avenue, before the kids pull up their pants.

It's not as far-fetched as you might think! Thanks to Dana Redd you saw it in The Monthly Standard first!

THE JAM-Good Life (Saunderson)

MOVIE OF THE MONTH

"The Corporation"

This movie teaches you EVERYTHING you need to know about a corporation. When the United States of America was still a young nation few corporations existed. The purpose of corporations was to serve the public. When the job was completed the corporation was extinguished. The capital earned by corporations during the Civil War and the American Industrial Revolution changed the corporate entity for the worse. Savvy corporate lawyers were successful in removing historical constraints. Corporate greed has ensued ever since. See how the 14th Amendment was manipulated. It's shameful. Go to www.themonthlystandard.news to watch.
