Open Season on Blacks

by Those Hired to Protect and Serve

by Kye "Queenblast Ma'at" Sterner

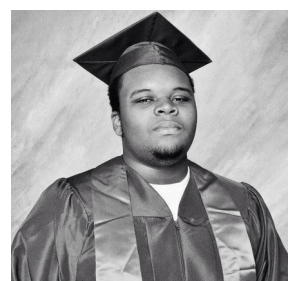

Lately the Black Nation has been in a total uproar due to recent murders of young black men by the police. Yeah the ones who wear the badge, who have taken an "oath" to protect the citizens of America (funny). Remember Michael Brown (18), Ezell Ford (25) and Shawn Bell (23), in addition to countless others who were shot down and slaughtered like animals all while being unarmed. Where is the justice you ask? While these young men corpses are laying cold in the ground and the families are left to forever mourn, these officers either have been exonerated or at home comfortable in their beds on a paid vacation. But they would like to call it a suspended LEAVE pending an investigation. To add insult to injury you have the media, and their fabrications trying to make the victims look like the guilty party. How does the victim go on trial for their own murder:

Another suggestion when taking the holistic approach is finding the right company. There are not many well-known companies that push for holistic body care. But, there is always a saving grace! The on-line shop Etsy.com is a platform for individuals and business owners to sell their holistic health products and many other items. Visit their website and have a look around. When all else fails, make your own!

We know better, and deep down, they know as well. They abuse the power they have stolen from our people, and we continuously give them unearned power. But it's time to take it back!!! It's time to stand up and fight for our children. It's time to fight for their future and our future. They shoot our men, our fathers, sons, and brother's down like they're absolutely nothing!!! And then try to deflect and subliminally justify their filthy disgusting actions by throwing "black on black" crime out there.

Originally police were implemented to catch run-a-way slaves. Since that mentality hasn't changed on either side the result will be the same. But my brother's and sister's we are in the age of information, and knowledge is power. Our people are awakening by the masses, and this terrifies them!!! We need more than protests and kumbayas. Do you think standing around with signs is going to solve anything? Remember a young man by the name of Rodney King, who was beaten down maliciously by members of the Los Angeles Police Department in March of 1993? Well that incident sparked the infamous L.A. riots. And now over 20 years later black men are not just being beaten, they're beaten shot down like they're not loved. Wake up people there is a man-made genocide taking place amongst our community. We are being infiltrated at every angle. The supposed rights we have are being stripped and, for the most part, the "elites" are making most of these actions illegally, while most of us are being brainwashed by the unimportant materialistic things or issues they have strategically placed before us. When will the Sheeple open their eyes!!! We try to do it "their" way - the judicious way, so to speak - and still we receive no justice!!! We call the police, but they're nothingness cowards, legal murderers who use every opportunity to pull that gun.

The Klu Klux Klan revamped, White supremacy at its finest (it's kind of an oxymoron for a black person to be a cop don't ya think?)!!! This is why the most of us take matters into our own hands. We are in a system that is a catch 22 for the melanated population, but we are the chosen. So, if we all can unify, all this buffoonery will stop. Indeed only the strong survive.

An elder once told me the other side won't stop until we start doing the same to theirs. There might just be some truth to that. They are not watching their children being slaughtered!!! Picked off one by one. We are a nation that has been oppressed for 400 years (and counting). We are fed up!!! Tired of trying to break free from those chains. But trust - We will not give up We As I write this I keep glancing at my children, thinking what do they have to look forward to if we don't resist and I mean strongly resist the oppression, they continuously try to force feed us!!! Oscar Grant, Eric Garner, Emmitt Till, Reneisha McBride, Trayvon Martin didn't have a chance to fight. It's our right. Better yet, our duty to stand for them, our babies, and ourselves. The bs will no longer be tolerated!!! Let your pain, anger, and rage be the motivator. We are one and we all shed the same tears, and share the same fears. Understand that we are royalty and they are fully aware of this as well. It not going to be easy. We are up against a beast that always stood against us. A system that we believed in, but was never intended to protect us. To keep ignoring or trying to turn the other cheek to truth, is not only a tragedy but detrimental, thus leading our race to an early demise. The extinction of the original man is the ultimate scheme of things. Please wake and listen. If we all come together, there is no way we can fail. So in memorandum of all our people that have fallen victim to white supremacy. It's time that the Kings and Queens, Gods and Goddesses unite in solidarity!!! We are all one.

OUR HISTORY

History Long Forgotten: The Slocum Massacre of 1910

by Nicole McNeal

Our peoples history is a vast one, full of triumphs and adversities that are left to be discovered and learned. There is no way to completely uncover in one lifetime, all of the wealth of knowledge our past that our forefathers and mothers left in their wake. One can only move a mountain one rock at a time. This piece of history is yet another rock, and one that deserves to be uncovered. The town of Slocum, Texas, like Tulsa and Rosewood, was considered a Black Wall Street- where African Americans had economic power and prominence in various political and social aspects of the community. Yet, the carnage of the undeserved white uprising has garnered a pitifully miniscule amount of attention or acknowledgement.

This year on July 29th marked the 104 year anniversary of one of the bloodiest genocides in a predominantly African American town. The Slocum Massacre of 1910, as it became known as, was racially motivated with several factors contributing to the ultimate annihilation and exodus of the black members in that community. Some of the factors included a debt collection attempt between a white and prominent black citizen, a black man being appointed as a supervisor over road improvements, and a lynching of a black man that started buzzes of retaliation by blacks against whites. One of the main agitators was James Spurger, who with a few others ignited the fears and prejudices of other members of the white community with rhetoric and gossip. On the evening of July 29th, 1910, after rumors, suspicions, and panic built up to its boiling point, a mob of over 200 whites traveled through Anderson County Texas and reached the town of Slocum.

Starting at Saddlers Creek and continuing through the county, the mob began their bloodshed, going from door to door and shooting unarmed blacks with no remorse or guilt. According to the August 1st edition of the Pittston Gazette the massacre was one-sided, rather than a race riot that other news outlets tried to portray, with 20 victims found dead. The Chillicothe Tribune reported between 18 and 25 victims found dead. However, historians and oral traditions estimate that the victims numbered in the hundreds- over 200. Anderson County Sheriff at the time W.H. Black reported to The New York Times his account of the murders, saying:

“Men were going about killing Negroes as fast as they could find them, and, so far as I was able to ascertain, without any real cause. These Negroes have done no wrong that I can discover. I don’t know how many [whites] were in the mob, but there may have been 200 or 300. Some of them cut telephone wires. They hunted the Negroes down like sheep.”

The merciless mass continued until morning, when Texas rangers started rounding up the militia led by Spurger and others. According to writer E.R. Bills, author of the book The 1910 Slocum Massacre: An Act of Genocide in East Texas, there were 11 arrests. Seven of the eleven men were indicted, but there were no convictions, even with the Judge presiding over the case stating:

“The law furnishes ample remedy. There is no justification for shooting men in the back, waylaying them, or killing them in their own houses”.

Judge Gardner also states to the Grand Jury that the incident was “a disgrace, not only to the country, but to the state” and it was up to them to do their “full duty”. So much for full duty...

While Hollywood, several authors, and various government bodies report, pay homage, and financially compensate cities like Rosewood, barely anyone knows about this horrendous chapter in United States history. Rosewood had 6 black victims, and two white victims, a movie made, and victims compensated. Meanwhile in Slocum, there has been no compensation of money for the families and descendants of the victims, and there is not even a national or a historical marker highlighting the bloody history of the town. The properties and businesses that were owned by the black citizens were absorbed by the town and redistributed to whites after the massacre occurred, and the black families had to endure those losses. Only in 2011 did the Texas government pass a resolution even acknowledging this massacre took place.

Why is this moment in history more common knowledge? Is it because there were no white casualties or victims? Is it because there were no trumped up charges of a white woman being victimized by a black man? Is it because the town of Slocum, which was predominately African American, is now over 93 percent white and has been since the massacre? It is more than likely possible that all of these factors are the case. Regardless, another rock in history has been uncovered, and it is our responsibility to keep it preserved for the next generation.

RELATIONSHIPS

The Time That We Spend by Sis. Brittany Forte-El

Islam, first and foremost beautiful people of color and hue. I hope that I reward you with an uplifting and informing reading experience by addressing some important issues within the Black Community in regards to Love and Relationships. One of our most formidable issues prominent in our community today is our investment of Time. Unlike money, when time is wasted, it can never be refunded back. Time lost is just that.... time lost. A lot of men and women within our community are not spending enough Time with their children, their partners, and most importantly, themselves. They are more willing to invest their Time into their work, their sex lives, their religious rendezvous (i.e. bible study, choir practice, congregational meetings, etc.), going to the club, getting high or drunk, wanting so badly to be the biggest drug dealer in the hood or the hottest rapper in your city, trying to adhere to European beauty standards, and so on and so forth. Now if you are single doing these things, I can see why, but even that isn't an excuse to go out and make something of yourself; or at least not an excuse to try and produce an opportunity to greatly improve the demographics of our community. Allow me to stress the importance of time.

WAYS TO STRENGTHEN YOUR RELATIONSHIPS

1. Go out on a date

Yes, I said it. Take your partner out on a date. For the love of the Most High, some of you are too anal to set up a date night in which you and your partner can enjoy time with yourselves. Life is not always as serious as you project it people of Hue. You are never too old to date your loved one. Some of you are probably like "I don't believe in dating." So, describe your idea of fun. You don't even have to go way beyond your means just to have a date. Keep things simple. It does not always require a large loot of money to have a night of nothing but pure, adulterated fun amongst yourselves. It won't hurt you to try it.

2. Keep the lines of communication open

Often times in Black Relationships, most partners seek to keep themselves or their partners on the hush. Encourage open dialogue sometimes. Ask your partner how their day went. Nagging them about what female he was talking to on his phone or who she is texting on Facebook is not a great way to invest your time in each other. Ask each other how one another feels, and be attentive to their thoughts, emotions, ails, and happiness. In the end, everyone wants to be heard.

3. Express more affection toward your partner

Some have issues in showing or receiving affection due to some traumas of their past, having never seen their parents be affectionate (which seems to be most common in the black community), or simply because they do not prefer it. All of the aforementioned reasons should be motivation to want to slowly ease them into it. A kiss on the forehead, a shoulder to cry on, a kiss on the cheek, your hand embracing their face, holding hands, interlocking arms, or even a simple hug are excellent ways to start. Reassure them that you care and do not intend them any harm. And if there are any children involved, then it is guaranteed beneficial for the children to see. I strongly recommend this come back into the Black Community. Chivalry never hurt anyone.

The Importance of Time to a Child

All too often in the Black Community, parents neglect to spend quality time with their children because their minds are so caught up into each and everyone elses business except their own. This most definitely has to change if we want to see a better future for them. Here are some suggestions.

1. Plan a day out of every week to hold family discussion. Teach them that it is ok to express themselves without stepping outside of the boundaries. The discussions can range from how their day was to how they feel about moving out of state, or how they currently feel about the present political regime.

It reassures them that they are being heard and that they, too, have a voice to speak. Too often we shut them up because we were taught to "honor and obey" as a way of socialized conformity. Let us break free of these shackles by respectfully granting our children a voice. I have found this activity to be very effective. We are never too young to learn from the mouths of babes.

2. Tell your children that you love them. How often do you hear a mother in your hood tell her child that she loves them? Frequently in the Black Community, parents are shouting at their children for every little thing that they do that in accordance to the parent is wrong. Not much love in that. Let's bring it back. Reassure your children that you love them, and ultimately care about their well being. You are ensuring them that their most basic of needs will be constantly met, and they will thank you for it.

3. Compliment them on every little thing that they do. The smallest of gestures that a child performs is literally to impress their parents. By acknowledging all the smallest of things they do for you, you are showing them how much you appreciate them; and it helps them to appreciate you more... especially if you have somewhat difficult children. I have found this to also be very effective when dealing with my oldest. Positive reinforcement is necessary, and I encourage, as well as inspire, each and every one of you to try it. Your children will react differently.

4. Pray or meditate with your children. Whatever way of life you embrace or spiritual practice you embody, make sure to include your children. A lot of households within the Black Community are spiritually scattered because there isn't a strong familial spiritual presence binding you all together. As my mother have always told me, "A family that prays together stays together." Pray or meditate at the dinner table, before engaging in discussion, when you wake them up in the morning, before you send them to bed, and so on and so forth. Let's break those chains of separation and start being more of an active parent in the lives of our children. Minding other peoples business will not help you with your children. "Charity begins at home, and it spreads abroad." Everything you teach your child at home, they will surely carry it outward in our community and in society in general. Make sure they are spiritually

A Holistic Approach to Body Care by Jennifer H. Snowden

There are more holistic body care products to choose from than ever before. From handmade body scrubs that contain no toxins or chemical fillers to herbal tea detoxes that cleanse the body and promotes total wellness. This boom in body care options allows consumers to choose products that are centered on holistic health. As with many body care product companies, there are product developers and business owners who love to promote healing naturally, while others lack empathy and focus on sales over satisfaction.

So, how do you choose the right company or the right products? The same enthusiasm you have in choosing the things you like (i.e. food, car, clothing, etc.), should be the same enthusiasm you have towards your body care products you use on a daily basis. Ultimately you want to do what's best for your health.

When selecting holistic products, be sure to do your research. Find companies who offer a list of all ingredients in the products. Knowing the ingredients allows the consumer to choose with confidence. Select products with the fewest ingredients that are easily pronounced. Some plant-based herbs have names you may have not heard before, don't be alarmed! A lot of the common names in products have scientific names. There are some holistic product companies who use the scientific name in place of the common name when listing ingredients. If you have to, look up ingredients that you just are sure of.

Another suggestion when taking the holistic approach is finding the right company. There are not many well-known companies that push for holistic body care. But, there is always a saving grace! The online shop Etsy.com is a platform for individuals and business owners to sell their holistic health products and many other items. Visit their website and have a look around. When all else fails, make your own!

There are many books, online recipes, youtube videos, and articles that have loads of information on how to formulate your own holistic body care products. Get out your glass bowls, wood spoons, and check your pantry for items you may already have. If you can't eat it, your skin doesn't need it!

BLACK ECONOMICS

Why Should the Black Community Care? by Psicòlogo Zulu

Why is this moment in history more common knowledge? Is it because there were no white casualties or victims? Is it because there were no trumped up charges of a white woman being victimized by a black man? Is it because the town of Slocum, which was predominately African American, is now over 93 percent white and has been since the massacre? It is more than likely possible that all of these factors are the case. Regardless, another rock in history has been uncovered, and it is our responsibility to keep it preserved for the next generation.

I'm not just talking about trading goods and services or even minerals. I'm talking about exchanging cultures. If in Ayiti there is a shortage of professors to teach certain courses, why not go to another Francophone Afrikan culture such as Benin or Senegal? This creates an exchange that leaves a lasting impact on the students and the teachers. The cultures begin to affect each other. This may well be going on. If it is, why do most people not know about it?

I am digressing, but you see my point. As Afrikan people we are all simply different facets of Afrika and there is a stronger need to see that. I'm not talking about going to the Jamaican spot to eat some x tail or moqueca de pesce at the nearest Brazilian restaurant. No, I'm talking about overstanding the need to link up with each other economically. This is a cultural war that has been disguised as a class war. How do you hold on to your culture when the money flowing into your land is leading all of your folks like silly little sheep away from their ancestors to hide in a cave out of the Sun?! You want to keep your culture strong? Stand up with the strength to keep it strong. What happens the day that Afrikans put the economic pressure on Europe and America to return all of those priceless historic artifacts? What happens when WE can put economic sanctions on a country for not actin' right? Think about this. No seriously, think about it.

Let's bring this back around to the purpose of this piece. What happens when you control the money that develops your society? What happens when you can bring the money forth to exchange with other cultures that are similar to yours? What happens when you can maintain the Afrikan Integrity of the institutions of higher learning that will educate you and yours? Take a look at the big picture! Take a look around! Look at all of the organizations that link the similar cultures and peoples of the world together, not only culturally and politically, but economically. They keep the money in their neighborhoods, to change hands in their countries many more times than what is taught in the financial education you receive here in the good ol' U.S. of A. If you can call it that. ously, think HARD Ayiti has always been a problem for the United States. Why? Because it is a country whose neighborhood wasn't putting up with that white supremacy nonsense anymore. It was a violent revolution because they were taught to speak violence. However, the real violence began later. In order to gain international recognition, Ayiti has to pay France 30 million gold francs (which had been reduced from 150 million gold francs). This began the financial assassination of Ayiti.

We have gotten used to these stories, to these realities. We have become adjusted to the status quo and don't even believe that this could change. I do. I don't believe it can change. I know it will. I know it every time I go to Rasta Paradise to buy my smell-good oils and hair products along with RBG accoutrements. I know it every time I go to Le Lambi to eat so OUTSTANDING Ayisyen food. I know it every time I go to the Jamaican spot to buy Solomon Gundy. You know why I know this? Because I made a conscious decision to buy from Afrikan people. I made a conscious decision to know where these places are and support them because they in turn support me. They support who and what I am, for when I walk the streets of a world that is populated with strong Afrikan economic bonds and thriving business, I know that I cannot be destroyed.
