An ADU, or Accessory Dwelling Unit, is a secondary, smaller living space on the same property as a primary single-family home, often called a granny flat, in-law suite, or backyard cottage, offering independent living with a kitchen, bathroom, and separate entrance, used for family, guests, or rental income, and subject to local zoning laws. They can be attached, detached, or converted from existing structure.

By December 1, 2026, local governments in Florida, including Highlands County, are expected to comply with new statewide mandates that require them to allow at least one ADU on any single-family residential lot. Once these updates are fully integrated: uses like garages, providing flexible housing and increasing property value.
