Organ Prelude and Postlude: J. S. Bach (1685-1750): Allabreve in D Major BWV 589

The Allabreve is written in Stile antico (old style) which was characterized by lines that ran calmly and gradually, usually with few harmonic extravagances. In Bach's day, stile antico was associated with church music, stateliness and solemnity.

In the Thanksgiving choral 'Now Thank We All Our God', the joy and the faith in God expressed in the text are interpreted in multiple motifs. Sometimes, Bach lets the parts speak out, and then they tumble over one another again, adding to the lively character. Bach lends extra harmonic tension before letting the closing phrase culminate in a long pedal point above a virtuoso explosion in the alto and tenor as he illustrates the 'countless great good God has done and still continues to do'.
