Organ Music Today

Today we pause from the survey of Bach's organ works to explore 2 masterpieces by Cesar Franck, one of Bach's admirers.

The Belgian-born César Franck (1822-1890) was organist of St. Clotilde in Paris for over 30 years. His works for the instrument as Liszt remarked "have a clearly marked place alongside the masterpieces of Bach." Franck was much loved and admired by his students, who gave him the nickname "Pater Seraphicus" (seraphic father).

In the Andantino, a nostalgic, moving piece, there are echoes of youth and hope while in the deeply-felt Choral we hear Franck at his most emotional. Franck uses the term choral not in the German sense (meaning a Lutheran hymn-melody) but to describe an original, impressive passacaglia, suggesting the tolling of a great bell as it moves from somber genesis through its peaceful end, a soft melody registered with 'Vox Humana', indeed a perfect musical rendition of the 'peace from above that surpasses all understanding'. Today we will hear the first half of this masterpiece.
