Welcome To Stoneham Memorial Church

The Belgian-born César Franck was organist of St. Clotilde in Paris for over 30 years and from 1872 onward professor of organ at the Conservatoire. His works for the instrument form a much more important and distinctive contribution to its repertoire than their number might suggest. Liszt remarked of his Six Pieces, "These poetic works have a clearly marked place alongside the masterpieces of Bach."

Among those few pieces he wrote for organ (and the last three pieces he wrote before his death) are the Three Chorales for Organ, the second of which is opening and closing our service today. This chorale is arguably the most profound of his organ works. Franck was a composer that loved the traditional forms of music, but he made these forms his own by the way he used them. The B minor chorale is in the form of a passacaglia and fugue, a passacaglia being a type of variation form in which the composition is based on a bass-ostinato which appears throughout the composition. Franck used a 16-bar bass theme. This work bears an outward resemblance at least in form to Bach's Passacaglia and Fugue in C Minor, but as with other works by Franck, his music is distinctive and speaks with a voice all his own.
